Ottawa police are investigating after a 24-year-old man was found unconscious in the Byward Market Monday morning and sent to hospital with life-threatening injuries.

Police spokesperson Marc Soucy said the man was found unconscious outside of the Sky Bar on Rideau Street following an altercation at about 2:30 a.m.

"We are trying to determine if it was the result of a fall or a result of the fight," said Soucy.

Paramedics spokesperson Jean-Pierre Trotter said the patient had not regained consciousness by the time he arrived at the hospital.

On Jan. 22, 24-year-old Navid Niran was fatally stabbed after visiting the same nightclub.

City councillor for Rideau-Vanier Mathieu Fleury was in the area as police investigated Monday afternoon. He said violence in his ward is "a significant issue," but should not scare people away from the market.

"I still feel that it's a safe area," he said.

"I'm from this area, I've walked my entire life on Rideau Street, never had any major incident. I'm not involved in criminality obviously, so what I say is our downtown is safe, Rideau Street is safe."

Fleury commended the work of the police and the local business improvement association for making the Byward Market safer.

As of late Monday afternoon, police Const. Henri Lantot said there were no arrests made and the investigation is ongoing.

Family questions police effort in missing-man search

Nicole Nayel hasn't seen her son in over a week and wants to know if the police are doing everything they can to find him.

Fouad Nayel, 28, went missing when he never showed up for a family dinner on Father's Day. He went to Petawawa earlier that day. "They gave us little answers," said Nicole, after a meeting with police Monday evening. "They should have more manpower; they should have more help."

The search is taking its toll on her and her family, she said, calling it "a bad dream." Relatives have taken the search into their own hands by putting up flyers and driving out of town to look for clues.

Police are "not being thorough with their investigation at all," said Fouad's cousin, Adam Mounzer.

Mounzer said he drove to Shawville, Que., because that was the last place where his cousin's cellphone received a signal. Lead investigator Sgt. Wayne Niemi said that piece of information doesn't necessarily mean Fouad was in Shawville. "The way cellphone towers work, it doesn't mean that person is there," said Niemi. "(The signal) could just be bouncing off the river."

Niemi added that Ottawa police are concentrating their efforts in the Petawawa area. Fouad was driving a black 2002 Nissan Altima, plates ATTA 634. He is six feet tall and is Middle Eastern. JOE LOFARO/METRO

Home business. No more art parties at gallery: City

A Hintonburg art gallery will no longer be holding public events after the City of Ottawa found it in contravention of the bylaws for home-based businesses.

"I lost my job, I lost my business," said Patrick John Mills yesterday after meeting with city officials.

The Patrick John Mills Contemporary Fine Art Gallery is still open, but Mills is only allowed to see one client at a time, which will be hard on the business, he said.

In memoriam. City plans to name street after officer

Ottawa will likely soon have a street named after murdered police officer Eric Czapnik.

Following the city's naming process, city staff are suggesting Brisebois Crescent, located next to the East Division police building on St. Joseph Boulevard, be renamed Eric Czapnik Way.

The city is currently accepting feedback on the proposal. If there are no objections, the renaming bylaw should be signed off by city council at a meeting in July, according to city staff.

Seven-month audit. Forensic review finds no evidence of coverup, but discovers 'disorganized' and 'incomplete' files

joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

A forensic review of Scout Canada's records reveals authorities were not contacted about at least 65 cases of alleged sexual misconduct against a youth.

"We are deeply and truly sorry for any harm that has happened at the hand of volunteers that were in our organization," said Steve Kent, Scouts Canada's volunteer chief commissioner at a press conference Monday.

"We will do everything that we can to prevent such instances from happening in the future and we encourage victims to talk to us."

The accounting firm KPMG conducted a seven-month audit of the organization's files, many of which were "disorganized" and "incomplete." The audit analyzed 486 identified records provided by Scouts Canada — records which were related to suspension and termination of volunteers for alleged sexual misconduct against youth from 1947 to 2011.

In addition to the 65 cases, there were 64 cases where it was unclear whether or not authorities were contacted. During the review process Scouts Canada provided information about those cases to police forces, which are investigating.

In 29 other cases, Scouts Canada had already contacted police. In 328 cases, police were aware of the allegation of sexual abuse before Scouts Canada.

Learning from past mistakes, the organization said it will now "rigorously" implement a new Child and Youth Safety Plan, which includes improved adult screening and training.

"I think Canadians can take comfort in the fact that we're confronting the past in its entirety now with a heightened level of openness and transparency like we've never seen before," said Kent.

Labour dispute. NHL contract negotiations a worry to Sens' draft pick Ottawa's 67s defenceman Cody Ceci and his family are overjoyed he was the first draft pick of the Ottawa Senators, but worried that a potential labour dispute may delay his chance to play for the team.

"Growing up and going to a lot of those games, and now being able to try out for that team, it's pretty cool," Ceci said on Monday.

Negotiations on a new collective bargaining agreement will begin soon to replace the 2004-05 agreement, which included a salary cap and expires Sept. 15.

Ceci said he's a little worried about the labour situation. "It would definitely suck if that were to happen. I could have to wait an extra year to reach my goal, but at the same time it would be the same for everybody in the league and I'd just have to deal with it."

In the meantime, his excitement at being the first draft pick for the Senators is shared by the whole family, including his mom.

"Oh cripes yeah," said Karen Ceci. "I was pretty much a crazy hockey mom at the draft."

She had been explaining to friends that the chances of Cody, if drafted, would get drafted to the Senators, were slim. "So when that happened, I just completely flipped. We're big Sens fans so it was really exciting," she said.

On Tuesday Ceci is headed to the Senators' development camp, along with the other draft picks and players.

Anyone who has thrown up their hands and shouted "f#@k it!" while searching for something on the Internet can try turning to a new Ottawa-based company that offers live search support.

"We noticed that people don't necessarily know where to go when they get search results," said Marc Belisle, who launched the controversially named search site Fuukit.com at the beginning of June. "The answer is there, but they don't know exactly how to look for it."

Powered by Google search, the site gives users the option of calling, texting or emailing their questions about the search results they've found to the site's operators.

"Just recently I had a man asking about information on employment insurance," Belisle said. "I walked the guy through their web page and took him to the point where he could apply online. It probably took about five minutes."

Belisle said that he came up with the name while working for Service Canada. "A client called me twice for help and it wasn't within our mandate to provide the information they were looking for," he said. "In frustration they said 'fuukit' and the name just clicked."

Since the site launched, questions have started to flow in, not just from Ottawa, but as far away as the Philippines and Brazil, Belisle said. So far he has been able to answer all of them.

"Every day there's more and more questions," Belisle said, adding that as the business grows he hopes to open a call centre in Asia to field the queries.

In an unscientific experiment Metro texted a question to Fuukit.com and got a correct response within seven minutes. How many horses are in the RCMP musical ride? Thirty-six.

Traveller's spirit and Scotiabank support help Shanghai native start Canadian journey

As the operator of a Shanghai travel agency, Yuxiang Zhang had a love of travel that he put to the test when he decided to move to Canada. But when he faced worries about this colossal trip, he discovered how Scotiabank's multinational team and services can provide a smooth landing.

Mr. Zhang's personal journey began after he visited Becky, his only daughter, who had migrated to Canada in 1999. Seeing how she was enjoying her life in a friendly, multicultural country he decided to become a family class immigrant.

"I was excited to join my daughter, but I was also unsure about the details, such as how would I move forward without speaking English?" says Mr. Zhang, who also wondered about practical issues such as the process to transfer money to a Canadian bank.

Fortunately, Becky convinced him to attend an immigration seminar in Shanghai, hosted by Scotiabank and The Cross-Cultural Community Services Association, where Bank officials answered every question, ranging from the Canadian job market to government services. He also learned about the Scotiabank StartRight[®] Program¹ for Newcomers, which includes a free day-to-day bank account for one year², a wide range of credit card options³ and a number of other customized services and benefits.

"Before the workshop, I was very worried, but after I felt relieved, and it gave me the courage to move forward," recounts Mr. Zhang, who arranged for his Canadian and U.S dollar bank accounts with Scotiabank, and applied for a credit card, while still in Shanghai, through the Bank's partnership with China Everbright Bank.

After landing in Toronto in late 2009, Mr. Zhang went alone to the Scotiabank branch at the Steeles and Silverstar location to activate his accounts. Speaking only Mandarin and Russian, he wasn't sure how things would go. Luckily, he was greeted by Isa Ho, Branch Manager, and her multilingual staff. "Surprisingly, it went well, and my accounts and debit card were ready, and my credit card came within a week," marvels Mr. Zhang.

Isa, a Canadian immigrant who speaks both Cantonese and Mandarin, is well-prepared to serve newcomers. She often calls them long distance before they move, to help them prepare. "I tell them about banking options and what are the best schools for their kids," says Isa, a 32-year veteran of Scotiabank, who still remembers first seeing donuts when she arrived. "When they get here, we answer their questions about Canadian customs, and explain about banking in Canada. Also, since many newcomers want to buy a home, we educate them on Canadian mortgages and how to avoid credit mistakes."

Today, Mr. Zhang is enjoying life in Canada, and whenever he has the chance, he speaks to others about the opportunities in Canada and "the friendly, open and trustworthy service I experience at Scotiabank."

That's good news for Isa Ho who teaches her Scotiabank team to, "Welcome every newcomer with a smile, speak their language, and serve them with our hearts."

With Scotiabank's help, Mr. Yuxiang Zhang is discovering a world of opportunities in Canada.

Elliot Lake tragedy. Officials initially called off search due to concerns over a possible second collapse

A member of the Ontario legislature says rescue teams will continue search efforts at a partially collapsed mall in Elliot Lake, Ont., hours after search attempts were called off.

New Democrat Michael Mantha says the search is on again after Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty urged officials to continue the effort.

Mantha says rescue workers are coming up with a plan to allow the rescue of any survivors or the remains of those inside the mall to be removed from the site.

Authorities called off the search earlier Monday after they deemed the mall too dangerous to send rescue crews into.

Hopeful personal vigils gave way to outraged group protests on Monday hours after officials announced they were halting efforts to rescue possible survivors.

Dozens of angry community members gathered outside city hall in the northern Ontario city, expressing their disgust that officials had walked away from a rescue effort they deemed too dangerous.

Residential schools. Community celebrates lost birthdays after commission hearing

A big party was held at the end of a hearing in Saskatoon to recognize all the birthdays that were missed by children who attended residential schools.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission provided cake, glow sticks, songs and cheers Sunday for all of the survivors who were never able to celebrate.

A stage was filled with children the same ages as many who attended the church-run schools.

The government apologized several years ago for the schools, where many aboriginal children were physically, emo-

The commission is holding hearings across the country and was in Saskatoon for several days last week.

Some of the people who attended said being able to celebrate a crucial part of childhood such as a birthday with other survivors was inspiring.

"I'm not alone. At (the) residential school, you felt so alone. You thought you were the only one going through this pain," said Bernadette Neapetung.

She attended the hearings with her brother, George, who also was sent to a residential school.

Egypt. New president starts crafting government

New Egyptian president Mohammed Morsi went to work first thing Monday morning and started work on forming a government.

This was even before he had a clear picture of what he could do after the ruling military stripped most of the major powers from his post.

Morsi, 60, a U.S.-trained engineer from the fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood group, is the first Islamist president of Egypt.

He defeated Mubarak's last prime minister, Ahmed Shafiq, in a tight race that deeply polarized the nation.

The country breathed a sigh of relief that at least the question of who won the presidential runoff had been resolved on Sunday, after the first free and fair elections in Egypt's modern history.

People returned to work a day after a panic that sent many home early for fear that violence might erupt when the winner was announced.

Traffic was flowing again through Cairo's Tahrir Square, the birthplace of last year's uprising and a major intersection that had been blocked for a week by

Walmart Canada ramps up hiring

Expansion. Already one of Canada's largest employers, retail giant plans to hire 3,100 more workers by 2013

Walmart Canada is ramping up hiring amid rapid expansion in this country by the U.S.-based retail giant.

Walmart says it will open 47 hiring centres across the country as it adds a total of some 4,000 new employees this year and next, about 500 more than previously announced.

The mass retailer pays "above minimum wage," which varies by province, said Alex Robertson, spokesman for Walmart Canada, adding that employees can also participate in a profit-sharing program.

Robertson said the chain is "looking to hear" from former Zellers employees, whose experience would be taken into consideration.

"We decided on a demo-

Facing competition

By the end of 2013, Walmart Canada expects to spend some $750 million to open, relocate or remodel 73 stores.

- Included are most of the 39 former Zellers stores for which Walmart Canada purchased leasehold rights in June 2011. They will reopen as Walmart stores in this fiscal year.
- The expansion comes as competition in the Canadian retail market heats up with the entry of fellow discount retailer Target next year. Target plans to open 125 to 135 stores.

cratic approach so we're looking at everybody the same way, but with the Zellers employees, they're all being interviewed," he said.

In addition to the permanent jobs, the various projects are expected to generate some 10,500 construction jobs.

"We are extremely excited to be adding more than 4,000 new associates to our team," said Bob Hakeem, senior vice-president of people at Walmart Canada, using the company's preferred term for employee.

Walmart Canada pharmacies are also in the midst of a significant hiring phase.

Walmart Canada has already hired 900 employees this year, from sales associates to managers in its stores across the country, to field operations and home office positions.

Already one of Canada's largest employers, it plans to hire an additional 3,100 workers by the end of 2013, raising its overall Canadian payroll to 94,000.

Walmart said more than half of the 73 projects will become supercentres, which offer an array of groceries as well as general merchandise. The retailer opened its first Canadian supercentres in Ontario in 2006 and has since ramped up expansion plans for the large-store concept.

Moms crack the Walmart market

Four Toronto-area moms with more than a dozen children between them have cracked the Walmart market with an idea for labelling the stuff kids lose.

After selling more than 50-million labels in 97 countries through Mabel's Labels online, the women have made a deal with Walmart Canada to put them on store shelves across the country.

The company's new product, blank, self-laminating write-on labels that stick to any surface and can withstand the microwave and dishwasher, are for parents who don't have time to order online and wait for delivery.

Their Write Away! labels are for a must for the kid who's going to camp tomorrow.

Camps and daycares require that personal property — every sock, shoe, water bottle and backpack — be labelled and Mabel's Labels has been providing customized labels online for nine years.

Three years ago, the moms came up with a version that could be sold at retail.

Julie Cole, 41, a former lawyer and mom of six, founded the company with her sister Cynthia Esp and two friends, Julie Ellis and Tricia Mumby.

They used to work out of a basement in Hamilton and now own a 14,000-square-foot facility in the city. They now employ 40 people.

Jenn Williams, category manager for stationery for Walmart Canada, had already known about Mabel's Labels because she was a mom herself.

"I was very excited they had come to us. They had done their research and were very well prepared. It was a perfect match for Walmart because our customer is Mom." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Tech trouble

RIM shares slide after downgrade

Research In Motion shares hit their lowest level since 2003 on Monday as the company was downgraded by investment firm Morgan Stanley, which called the company "essentially broken."

Morgan Stanley analyst Ehud Gelblum said while the troubles at RIM are well known, the investment firm believes estimates for the company need to come down even further over the next six months.

Shares in RIM traded as low as $9.27 on Monday on the Toronto Stock Exchange, its lowest level since 2003 after adjusting for stock splits. The stock closed down 76 cents at $9.36.

The drop came as RIM dismissed a Sunday Times newspaper report on the weekend that suggested the company was considering selling its handset manufacturing unit or a stake in the whole company.

Speculation that RIM may be sold or broken up increased earlier this year after the company hired JPMorgan Chase and RBC Capital Markets to help evaluate its strategic options.

SEXISM IS NO JOKE

SHE SAYS...
Jessica Napier
metronews.ca/shesays

Every once in a while, you can count on some male comedian to drag out the hackneyed “girls-aren’t-funny” routine to try and gain some attention — or, in Adam Carolla’s case, sell

In an interview with the New York Post last week, the comedian complained about his personal struggle (eye roll) with unfunny female colleagues. “They make you hire a certain number of chicks, and they’re always the least funny on the writing staff,” he whined. “The reason why you know more funny dudes than funny chicks is that dudes are funnier than chicks.”

It’s pretty pathetic when a 48-year-old man uses words like “dudes” and “chicks” to offer commentary on gender roles in comedy. But I suppose this is the type of enlightened discourse we can expect from the comic genius behind The Man Show, a now-defunct program that featured such classic bro-centric segments as Guess Whose Asscrack and Breast Implant Fashion Show.

In reality

“There are a growing number of female comedians disproving these sexist theories, both in front of the camera and behind the scenes.”

If Carolla expects his staff writers to rely on low-brow, homophobic (GLAAD recently lambasted Carolla after he joked that the LGBT acronym should be changed to YUCK), frat-boy humour to get cheap laughs, then I’m not surprised to learn that he hasn’t encountered many women who adhere to his idea of funny.

Sadly, while the backlash against Carolla’s misogynistic remarks was substantial, he’s not alone in his sexist ideas. The late Christopher Hitchens opined a similar argument in his infamous 2007 Vanity Fair essay titled Why Women Aren’t Funny.

In the piece, Hitchens suggested that men are obliged to be funny in order to attract members of the opposite sex. “Women have no corresponding need to appeal to men in this way,” he wrote. “They already appeal to men, if you catch my drift.” Presumably, Hitchens’ drift is that men are only attracted to women in a superficial (read: libido-driven) way. Underlying this belief is the dangerously chauvinist assumption that women are to be looked at, not heard from.

Thankfully, there are a growing number of female comedians disproving these sexist theories, both in front of the camera and behind the scenes. Kristen Wiig, Lena Dunham, Mindy Kaling, Wanda Sykes, Tina Fey, Betty White — the list of women who are funnier (not to mention more successful) than Adam Carolla is endless. These women produce and star in their own films and TV shows, they win awards, and they narrate audiobooks that will make you laugh aloud like a lunatic on the bus during your morning commute.

As for Adam Carolla, this washed-up man-child should go back to hosting his wildly successful podcast that you’ve probably never heard of.

Alex Pettyfer bares all

Magic Mike. Actor talks about psyching himself up for semi-nude dancing

Metro World News in Hollywood

While audiences are already familiar with Alex Pettyfer after a busy 2011 — with I am Number Four, Beastly and In Time — they are about to see a lot more of him, to put it lightly, with the release of Magic Mike. Pettyfer stars as a newcomer to the world of male stripping taken under the wing of the titular Mike (Channing Tatum, who is also the inspiration for Pettyfer's character). Stripping may seem like a daunting gig, but it turns out baring all didn't bother him as much as learning to dance.

How awkward have interviews for this film been?

I guess you kind of like dive into the fact that when you do a male stripper movie, they're going to ask you interesting questions. So you have to take everything and bite the bullet. Yes, I think the most frequently asked question is biggest wardrobe malfunction. And I think the biggest wardrobe malfunction that you have is that when you wear a thong and you have screaming girls, it can accidentally fly off. Thank God that didn't happen to me. It was during Matthew (McConaughey's) dance. It was kind of very funny.

Once you've signed up for a role like this, clearly you know what you're in for. But how do you mentally psych yourself up for it?

It's a very scary thought, one, to dance, as I've never danced before, and two — the fact that you're going to dance practically naked, you kind just wrap your head around the fact that you've got to dive into it fully. And the fact that all the other guys are in the same boat as us, doing the same thing and — apart from Channing — not having the experience beforehand, and having the experiences firsthand on the set was also very calming. I had to learn how to dance, because I can't dance. At all. To save my life (laughs). But at the end of the day, you don't want to go to a male strip club and we're all perfect, classic dancers. What's great about the movie is that it's fun and mistakes are forgiven. It's an amazing thing to watch the flaws of a stripper because more comedy and more grime equals more reaction.

You're not playing Channing Tatum per se, but he is the basis for your character. Having him there must be...

A little awkward (laughs). It's a little awkward, yeah, because obviously he's a phenomenal dancer, for one, and you can't compete with that. And he's lived this life. But it actually really helped me, personally, because the awkwardness and vulnerability of not having experienced what goes on in this world was actually what my character had to experience, so it actually really helped.

You also had some very enthusiastic extras on set for the dance numbers.

Showgirls

What about that other stripper movie?

"A friend asked me if this is the male Showgirls — which it really isn't. I almost had a heart attack there. Like, are we Showgirls? Oh, f—!," says Pettyfer.

But will people draw that connection anyway, because it's a movie about stripping? Pettyfer doesn't think so.

"You follow the characters through a journey," he says.

"It just happens to be in the world of male stripping."

They were phenomenal. I wouldn't really call them actresses because I think they were very, very glad to be there. On most film sets with background, you have to be like, "Give more!" And with these guys, for 12 hours straight they were screaming.

Anthony Bourdain: Off with their heads

Somewhere between continent-hopping and mysterious cauldrons of soup, chef and No Reservations host Anthony Bourdain found the time to pen a graphic novel.

Part kitchen revenge fantasy, part kung-fu foodie fun, Get Jiro! includes a scene in which a man is decapitated for ordering a blasphemous California roll.

"There are people who work 60 years trying to get the same 20 to 25 pieces of classic sushi perfect, but they know they will never reach that point. That kind of drive for perfection deserves respect," Bourdain told us when we caught up with him this week in New York City.

"So when you see somebody go into a regular sushi bar and treat it like it's crap or just another meal, well, I fantasized about seeing somebody lose their head!"

We wonder what the recommended punishment would be for a sriracha sprinkle. Not that we'd ever do that. We're just wondering — for our savage friends, whose heads aren't ours.

Why go meatless?

Why should people aim to reduce their consumption of red meat? Metro asked Meatless Monday founder, Sid Lerner, for a few reasons: "Animal fat is the villain. Red meat is high in cholesterol and saturated fat and knocking it off the menu is good for your health. Eating it in excessive amounts (a portion larger than the size of a deck of cards, more than three times week) could eventually trigger a heart disease and or, diabetes. Eating mass amounts of red meat messes up the environment. Reducing global consumption will lighten up our carbon footprint."

Go meatless this summer

Food for thought.

The Meatless Monday campaign is fighting to reduce global meat consumption by urging carnivores to go veggie one day a week. In the Meat Free Monday Cookbook veteran vegetarian, Beatles singer Paul McCartney, shares his favourite recipes. Here's one:

It's no secret that a diet high in processed red meat can dramatically increase the risk of death from heart disease or cancer. But with the summer barbecue season in full swing, we've been gorging on burgers most weekends. Will cheese and beans ever rival the real deal? Probably not. But it's time to tackle the scary truth, one steak at a time.

This is a fantastic salad. Here it's served with tofu, but you could just as easily serve it with veggie burgers or vegetarian sausages, as well as fries and mashed potatoes.

1 Preheat the oven to 400°F and roast the cherry tomatoes for 10 minutes.

2 Cover the bottom of a pan with cold water and place a steamer above it. Put the broccoli, green beans, and carrots in the steamer, turn the heat on quite high, and steam for about 15 minutes, occasionally prodding the carrots with a fork to see if they are done. Some people like them slightly crunchy, others prefer them a little softer.

3 While the vegetables are steaming, make a salad with the leaves and scallions.

4 Combine the cornmeal and herbs in a bowl. Heat some olive oil in a frying pan. Dip the tofu in the cornmeal mixture and then fry until golden.

5 Whisk together the ingredients for the dressing, but only pour over at the last minute.

- 3 scallions, finely chopped

Pesticides still affecting our daily lives

Chemicals. Despite recent moves to remove them from our food system, they can still be found

life@metronews.ca

Pesticides still lurk. Your city may have banned these pest-killing chemicals, but they continue to quietly cause illness in society.

The Ontario College of Family Physicians (OCFP) recently conducted a review of 142 studies on pesticides, and found their use is associated with disorders of breathing, brain development and reproduction.

"The bans are a great step in the right direction," says Dr. Kate Bassil, an epidemiologist at Mount Sinai Hospital, "but there is still an opportunity to decrease exposure."

Pesticides are still used in many ways: to kill bugs on house plants, in farming, in flea and tick products, and on lawns, explains Bassil, an assistant professor at the University of Toronto and an author of the review.

Pesticides are still prevalent in our society's foods. ISTOCK

"The message from our report is, look at opportunities wherever possible to decrease exposure."

When a pregnant woman is being exposed to pesticides it can have negative effects on her developing baby — leading to low birth weight or abnormal reactions to stimuli.

"In the uterus, while the baby is developing, pesticides can cross the blood-brain barrier and impact the developing brain," says Bassil.

The review also suggests that ADHD is more common in children who had higher levels of pesticide exposure during their mother's pregnancy.

Farm employees show an increased risk of asthma from working near pesticides 2,4-D and glyphosate.

"One simple message that often comes up is about the fruits and vegetables we eat," says Bassil.

"Where possible, choose organic, but that is not always affordable, so wash your fruits and vegetables thoroughly."

The OCFP suggests that if you are exposed to pesticides in an agricultural setting, use personal protection equipment and change your clothes after work.

All good things come to an end: a look at Lunch Rush

Shari Goodman
food@metronews.ca

A good meal always has an end. And so too does this Lunch Rush column. Today is the last day for the column that shows you where to find your lunch in Ottawa in 40 minutes or less and with a $25 budget.

After 138 restaurant lunch reviews, 4,000+ minutes lunching, 145 weeks of exploring the dining scene in Ottawa, I must choose my top five places to grab lunch or a best bite. A difficult task.

The food truck scene in Ottawa is in its infancy. But Bite This is on the cutting edge, offering, on the street, haute cuisine such as the Cowboy Wannabe of grilled sirloin, roasted peppers, caramelized onions and goat cheese.

My most memorable review is from Mama Grazzi's because of my fond memories there. The Brado, which is ravioli stuffed with cheese, garlic and chili peppers is perfect, but it's the experience that lingers.

For a long time, you couldn't get decent ribs in Ottawa. The Smoque Shack fixed that issue. The Jamaican jerk chicken is lip-tingling good, the pulled pork has a dash of sweetness and the meaty pork side ribs are extremely tender.

Finally, be pampered with goodness at either Odile or Edgar. Both are run by the same chef-owner, Marysol Foucault, who knows how to treat your taste buds and pamper you with fine food such as the Croque Odile: smoked artisanal ham, creamy béchamel, melted gouda, arugula, thinly sliced apples and toasted walnuts on crusty bread.

Thanks to all of you for sharing this culinary journey with me. Remember, the best lunches are shared with friends.

And that's my wish for you. Eat. Enjoy life. Spend time with friends and loved ones. Bon appétit.

2. In a medium skillet over a medium-high temperature, heat the olive oil. Add the onion, garlic and thyme, then sauté for 5 minutes, or until the onion starts to get tender. Season with salt and pepper, then set aside.
3. Split each English muffin in half and arrange cut side up on a baking sheet. Set under the broiler just long enough to lightly toast, about 1 minute.

4. Top each muffin half with a brie, then spoon a bit of the onion mixture over each. Place under the broiler for another minute. Transfer the halves to serving plates, then top each with a spoonful of honeycomb. Serve immediately.

How to socialize your partner and not be annoying

askcharlesthebutler@metronews.ca
For more, visit charlesmacpherson.com

Dear Charles, I have to admit that the man I chose to be my boyfriend has some traits that I would prefer he did not possess. OK, I admit it: I think he has bad manners. For example, he has a habit of forgetting to ask for his water without ice at restaurants. At the end of the meal, he wants to drink water without ice, so he scoops ice out with a fork or a spoon and puts it in his empty plate. Then he drinks the water. Sometimes I try not to let it bother me, especially when we're in a really casual restaurant. However the other night he did it in a small, fancier restaurant, and I could see people looking at him. How do I socialize my boyfriend without being an annoying girlfriend who is overtly trying to socialize her boyfriend? I've tried to model ordering water without ice (even though I prefer ice) but he doesn't get the hint. Rolling my eyes and being annoyed when he does stuff like that

Stressed Girlfriend

Dear Stressed Girlfriend,

I'm a firm believer you must deal with this issue head on and sooner rather than later, so how do we do this?

Firstly, not in public, nor in front of a waiter, pick a private place when it is just the two of you. Once alone, I think I would just come right out and say, "You know John, I've noticed that when you pick the ice out of your glass, people at the tables around us are staring at you, and it is making me uncomfortable. Would you please do me a favour and when you order water, can you please order it without ice?"

The reason I like this method is because it tells him about others who have observed his behaviour and as his girlfriend, how this makes you uncomfortable.

Please let us know how it goes! Fingers crossed!

MAXIMUM BENEFITS

CREDIT CARDS OFFER ADVANTAGES

Many Canadian families are tightening their belts, and examining the role of credit cards is an important step when you review your household budget. With more than 70 million credit cards now in circulation in Canada, we easily take for granted the number of real benefits they can provide for the average consumer.

When you use a credit card for everyday shopping, for instance, you don't need to carry a large amount of cash or provide the additional identification necessary to pay with a cheque.

A credit card also gives you a complete detailed summary of your monthly spending, an indispensable tool for creating and managing a budget.

Young Canadians should be aware that acquiring a credit card and using it responsibly is the quickest way to establish a positive credit rating, an absolute necessity for when they apply for a car loan or mortgage. Maintaining a strong credit rating by paying your credit card bills on time will help secure the lowest possible interest rate when you do apply for a mortgage or loan.

Credit cards often get a bad rap as debt magnets. On average, however, they account for less than five per cent of total household debt. Since more than 64 per cent of us pay our credit card balance in full each month, most of us pay an effective interest rate of zero. A credit card provides a convenient and secure way to shop, budget and manage your finances.

With the growing popularity of online shopping, credit cards have become even more essential; they can also help reduce the hassles of travel.

Millions of merchants accept major credit cards around the world, so you rarely have to worry about having foreign currency on hand. Furthermore, they are usually required to reserve a hotel room, rent a car, and make other travel arrangements.

Depending on the credit card you choose, you can earn points toward travel or merchandise with every dollar you spend. Many people use credit cards for regular expenses such as groceries and monthly bill payments to amass as many points as possible. Some cards also include plans that extend warranties and offer insurance on purchases. Competition amongst card providers for your business is fierce — with a bit of research, you can get a card with the extra features that suits your needs exactly, maximizing the benefits.

Does the Net handle all your finances?

Plugged in. Trying to pay a bill or cancel a card can be a total nightmare when the Internet is down — have a back-up plan

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths

We're all pretty much tech addicts these days and nowhere is this dependency more evident than in our Internet love affair. But everyone must have a fall back plan if you lose your connection, especially for financial data. I know of what I write.

This week I lost my service for a couple of hours and it pretty much brought my

Alison's money rule

"Love the Net but be sure to have a financial back-up plan for when it fails."

work to a standstill. I couldn't access e-mail, let alone pay bills or check my calendar. I also had to contact my bank regarding a transaction. But have you ever tried to contact a specific person at a branch when you can't even locate a current phone book?

When the Internet abandons you the biggest concern is accessing your financial life. Delays could mean interest charges or other penalties.

One reader missed making his RRSP contribution when he lost service the night of the deadline. That cost him thousands in tax.

Here are four important steps you should take to protect your finances from cyber interruption.

1. Save. With programs such as Yahoo or Gmail, which are not resident in your computer, save important e-mails to your hard disk. Search the respective help programs for instructions. But I find it is even quicker to cut and paste e-bills or other important financial e-mails and save them in Word.

The advantage here is that you can make notes about when a bill is paid or add information about changing a cell or cable package, for example, with the relevant confirmation number. Assuming you back up your computer the information is easily accessible, Net or no Net.

2. Contacts. Print your contact list and make sure you have contact numbers for every bill you pay as well as for your bank and brokerage. Store it somewhere safe.

3. Inventory. Have a hard copy of all banking information including account numbers, passwords and security questions. I abbreviate the latter two for safety. For extra protection store it in a safety deposit box but be aware that if the bank isn't open you're stuck.

4. Calendar. Maintain a simple hard copy calendar or one resident on your computer noting when all bills are due. It will be a lifesaver if the Internet goes dark.

Ten ways to save money moving

FUN AND FRUGAL
Leslie Scorgie
money@metronews.ca
Twitter: @Lesleyscorgie

I spent this past weekend moving out of my suburban house and into my new downtown condo. Though I knew it would be expensive, I underestimated the timing of my total costs.

My VISA card hasn't seen this much action in one weekend since the time it was stolen four years ago.

Here are ten easy ways to save big when moving.

1. In advance of your move, prepare a budget. A budget is a tool to help you plan for your total moving expenses so you can avoid unnecessary debt once the bills start rolling in. Include costs such as truck rental, mileage, movers, soft costs and more.

2. Plan for soft costs which fall outside of your expected moving expenses such as utility, cable, Internet and phone hook-ups. Closing costs for a house such as legal fees and taxes can add up to thousands. Don't get caught off-guard by soft costs! Ask your realtor or lawyer what to expect.

3. Downsize before you move so there will be less to transport. I sold 80 per cent of my furniture prior to moving through Kijiji. I also donated boxes of clothes, coats, boots, games and other household goods to a local charity. Use websites such as Craigslist, Kijiji, eBay and others to off-load your goods.

4. Rather than paying a moving company to pack up, transport, and unpack your house, do it yourself. If you're moving locally, bribe your friends to help with pizza, beer, begging and a big "thank you". Borrow a pick-up truck, and cart your things over by the truckload.

If you've got a long haul to your new place, rent a truck through a company like U-Haul. Alternatively, it can be more affordable to ship your stuff using a pod rather than a moving truck.

5. If you need to hire movers, get multiple quotes, which will help you negotiate for the best rate. Work alongside with movers, so that you can reduce the time it takes and total billable hours. Save big by moving in the off season or mid-week rather than on the weekend.

6. Negotiate everything. Moving company's fees, truck rates, and much more are negotiable. Ask for a discount, present a competitive offer and if the manager doesn't want to cut you a deal, take your business elsewhere.

7. Clean up yourself. Unlike my new condo, which was a pigsty when I took possession, most new homes are supposed to be clean. Don't hire a cleaner. Grab your rubber gloves and start scrubbing.

8. Save on packing supplies. Borrow boxes from friends, or ask your local grocery store for free ones. Dollar stores sell inexpensive packing tape and markets. Use your clothes, towels and sheets to wrap delicate items rather than buying bubble wrap.

9. Deduct qualified moving expenses from your taxes. Check with your accountant whether your expenses are deductible and keep all of your moving receipts.

10. If you're moving for work, ask your employer to pay for it.

Don't forget to put your piggy bank in the U-Haul van. ISTOCK IMAGES

Soon Jonathan Toews, John Tavares, Shea Weber, Shane Doan and 50 other NHLers followed — as sure a sign as any about how seriously members of the NHL Players' Association are taking their last set of meetings before negotiations begin on a new collective bargaining agreement.

Former Wimbledon champ Venus Williams ousted

Tennis. Williams was diagnosed with an autoimmune disease last year

Racket bag slung over her shoulder, resignation written across her face, Venus Williams weaved through fans milling about on the sidewalks that players must traverse to get from Court 2 to the Wimbledon locker-rooms.

The 32-year-old Williams had just absorbed a lopsided first-round loss at the Grand Slam tournament she once ruled, a poor performance that raised questions about how much longer she will keep playing tennis while dealing with an energy-sapping illness.

She trudged by as her hitting partner, David Witt, was saying: "It's tough to watch sometimes. I think everybody sees it. I don't know what else to say."

Looking lethargic, and rarely showing off the power-based game that carried her to five Wimbledon titles and seven majors overall, Williams departed meekly Monday with a 6-1, 6-3 defeat against 79th-ranked Elena Vesnina of Russia. Only once before — as a teenager making her Wimbledon debut in 1997 — had Williams exited so early at the All England Club.

Still, Williams said she'll be at the London Olympics next month and is "planning" to be back at Wimbledon next year.

"I feel like I'm a great player," Williams said.

Germany aims to change tradition vs. Italy

Germany's young team can achieve something none of its predecessors have ever managed — beat Italy at a major tournament.

With such a negative record against Italy, no wonder the Germans don't want to be reminded of the past ahead of Thursday's European Championship semifinals in Warsaw.

It was Italy that smashed German hopes of winning the 2006 World Cup at home, beating the hosts in the semifinals with two late goals. Germany captain Philipp Lahm said his teammates are not concerned with statistics, but the coaching staff has been impressed by the cool nerves of Andrea Pirlo.

"That was cheeky," goal-keeping coach Andreas Koepke said Monday of Pirlo's chipped penalty kick in the quarter-final win over England. "Of course we remember earlier matches and we remember 2006 as well. But it's in the past."

Germany is in the semifinals for the fourth straight major tournament. The team made the final of Euro 2008 and the semifinals of the 2010 World Cup, losing both times to Spain. Germany has won 15 straight competitive matches, a record.

"We are confident we can beat any team, but it will be tough. Italy showed how well it can play already by holding Spain to a draw," said Mesut Ozil. "We are strong in attack and in defence, we believe in ourselves and we want the title." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Horoscope

♈ Aries | March 21 - April 20.

Your thoughts will become more positive now that mind planet Mercury is moving in your favour again.

♉ Taurus | April 21 - May 21.

Something you value will have to be given up but if you are wise you will realize it has to happen so there is room for something even better to come in and replace it.

♊ Gemini | May 22 - June 20.

You need to speak up about something you think isn't fair.

♋ Cancer | June 21 - July 22.

Stop trying to hurry things along because what is meant to happen will happen in its own good time. That applies to all areas of your life but especially to money issues where, quite soon, you are in for some good news.

♌ Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22.

Your outlook will change quite a bit over the next few days.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22.

Don't draw attention to yourself today.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22.

Let friends and colleagues know how you feel today, even if you are the kind of Libra who hates to show emotion.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21.

You will have to make some tough decisions over the next few days, decisions that will impact your career in major ways.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21.

It's OK to bend the rules a bit today. No harm will come of it so long as you do it sensibly and don't take too many liberties.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20.

Something you once thought was so important now seems trivial, and it's to your credit that you are not afraid to change your mind.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18.

A relationship problem that has been worrying you for weeks will resolve itself over the next two or three days. Whether the resolution seems "good" or "bad" depends on your outlook.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20.

What you need to remember today is that every challenge you face is also an opportunity. Put another way: the more you are challenged the more you will grow and the more you will learn and profit over time.
